Money : 1296 in gold.

Equipment : Two sets of clothing, boots, a pair of gloves, belt, bedroll, backpack, two large sacks, to small sacks, a water skin, and a tinder box.

Family : He is the oldest of five children. Not much is known about the other four brothers other than the still live on the Western Empire where they grew up. He came to the Eastern Territory at the age of thirteen.

Disposition : He's a skilled knight and makes sure everyone knows it. On occasion, he has been known to pick on a new comer to show him who is boss, and to remind everyone else. He is rather fond of Praxlis. To increase the bond between them, he has learned to read and write Dwarven, as well as despises elves. Many believe him to be a spy working for the Western Empire due to his heritage. However, there is no proof to confirm this belief.

Agaidi

Type: Flamberge sword with a black blade (dwarven size); Greater Rune Weapon.

Damage: 4D6

Alignment: Anarchist

Powers: All common rune powers. Also, the sword is able to perform the magical technique of the R' Alum Slash. The technique was created by a famous Elven sorcerer. When the wielder slashes the sword at an opponent and says the words, "R' Alum Slash," a shockwave is emitted from the blade. The shockwave begins from the tip of the blade and moves outward in a cone shape. It spreads to a maximum of ten feet in front of the sword with a five foot radius at the end. The shockwave inflicts 4D6 points of damage to everything within its path. The R' Alum Slash can be used up to three times per 24 hour period.

Also, most rune weapons will naturally attempt to reject any type of magic directed towards it. However, Agaidi is willing to except the casting of blade spells (only blade spells; no other types of magic) upon it. This is strange considering its extremely conceited attitude. Agaidi (not the wielder) has an additional +6 to save versus all other types of magic.

Curse: None.

Personality: Agaidi is extremely conceited. It feels it is the greatest rune weapon ever made and doesn't mind hurting anyone who doubts it. It will find a wielder who has a similar disposition. Also, Agaidi is fond of dwarves and hates elves.

History: Agaidi was one of the last rune weapons ever created. It was forged for the legendary Blade Caster, Elsudia near the end of the Elf-Dwarf War. She was well known for casting the Speed Weapon Spell on the sword to maximize the number of her attacks. The sword itself is quite fond of the spell. At the end of the war, she disappeared along with the sword. She was last seen fighting a group of elven forces right before the Great Cataclysm. It is believed by most that she fell in the fierce battle and her sword lost to the ages. However, some believe that she emerged victorious from the battle and was one of the legendary Blade Casters who fled into the mountains after the war. Two years ago, the sword was discovered near the Old Kingdom Mountains. Its current owner is a wandering human knight named Sir Malik. The two have been together for only a couple of months, but their personalities are so similar that they have already formed a link. He was last seen traveling through the Eastern Territory.
